Chapter 1 by Ava Chase

He stumbled through the cave as water lapped at his feet. Every time he took a step a new sense of pain blinded him. The scratches were small at first, but they got larger with each step he took. His wounds ran as he stepped forward again. The rushing water got louder and louder, and the only light was a faint glowing aura radiating from his bruised and beaten body. The roaring of the water got louder and louder as he took another step. Too late, he saw the massive wave headed straight towards him. His glowing aura flickered and died, and he caught a glimpse of the scratches on his legs that formed a misshapen "A" before everything went black.
